

Baltimore Woman invents actual live rose that lives for 5 years

Maryland, Baltimore , Thursday, January 18, 2018 PRNewswire

— Consumers who are looking for that perfect gift for that special someone, want an stunning rose hand picked at peak of freshness: Everbloom by Meaghen King. King has developed a natural preservative creating handpicked live roses that live 5 years. Our roses are all natural don't need watering or sunlight and 100% real and very alive. King says, "They smell amazing and bring the joy and romance to your life everyday." for 5 years. Everbloom is one of the few flower companies making sure it's clients can enjoy beautiful roses in our handmade glass domes that compliment any decor year round.

Founded on her grandma's birthday in September 2017 , Baltimore native Meaghen King launched Everbloom, a new kind of floral company featuring our signature product Everbloom Classic ; a live hand-cut rose that lasts 5 years. Meaghen was saddened that the beauty of a rose, ended short after they were cut. Ask Meaghen and she will tell you, "A rose is nature true work of art, intricate in detail, and such a simple joy to behold." But preserving them in their natural state enchanting their natural beauty, and spreading that joy to as many people as possible is why Meaghen started Everbloom back in 2017.

When she's not watching a Disney movie, or enjoying a Broadway show Meaghen enjoys helping others grow just as her roses do with a honest and caring spirit. An avid reader, and wonderful artist, her attention to detail and hard work are what drives her spirit and Everbloom everyday. Everbloom's headquarters are in Baltimore Maryland, where we grow and handpick each flower by hand. Its important to have beautiful living things here in Baltimore, to make people smile. Her mission is "One smile, one rose at a time for the people of Baltimore"
